MISSING

Half a dozen people have disappeared in the upper McKenzie River Valley in recent years.

Two dead bodies have been found.

Authorities see no connection between the cases.

MAKE EUGENE A DEMOCRACY FOR ALL

Regarding City Club of Eugene President Andrew Kalloch's Sept. 7 Viewpoint "What Makes Eugene, Eugene," I suggest that is an open question and to elucidate it we must first ask: What is the viability of Eugene's institutions insofar as they even remotely approximate something like a free society based on citizen participation?

The City Club's lineup for this year's speakers begins with Dr. Johnny Lake to discuss race, culture and ethnicity. But what about working class people in a city dominated by the middle class?

In elucidating the question of the viability of free institutions — which require citizen participation — the people most likely to be involved in political life, in voluntary associations and to vote are, whether we like it or not, college educated people with middle class incomes.

Such people create and formulate ideas about where Eugene is, where it should go and why — people close to the levers of power.

The key issue in Eugene as well as American society is the organization of the economy and the relation between corporate and governmental power.

Will the City Club face that issue head on and foster citizen equality, the key value of democracy? Or will it reinforce the continued dominance of the middle class? It's a dominance that group does not deserve, particularly if we are true to democracy's key value, citizen equality.

THE FIERCE URGENCY OF NOW

If you were on a ship in the middle of the ocean and it started taking on water, you would become alarmed and head for the lifeboats. We are now on a planet in the middle of space which is rapidly taking on heat. There are no lifeboats to take us to a nonexistent Planet B, yet the level of alarm is remarkably low.

The rising temperatures are causing unprecedented heatwaves, unprecedented wildfires, unprece-ed droughts and unprecedented hurricanes. The word "unprecedented" no longer shocks us. Yet the engine light is flashing as we drive down the road to destroying the planet. What to do?

It has been established beyond doubt that the burning of fossil fuels is responsible for the climate situation in which we find ourselves, so we must stop burning them ASAP. The very profitable fossil fuel industry has known of these climate consequences for decades. Their power is money, and they have successfully out-lobbied scientists and funded politicians. Meanwhile, they've offered unproven, inadequate or financially infeasible solutions such as carbon sequestration, renewable natural gas and carbon offsets.

Only a mass groundswell of alarmed citizens — that means you and me — demanding action will convince our elected officials to act. Politicians may compromise, but physics does not. We can't spend money on renewable energy projects and then permit more fossil fuel projects. If you want to leave our children a decent world, start now. Speak out, vote pro-climate and, most effectively, join with climate activists. Time is not on our side.

THREE BLIND MICE ON THE LANE COUNTY COMMISSION

In August, the conservative majority on the Board of County Commissioners (Pat Farr, David Loveall and Ryan Ceniga) pushed and bullied the County Administrator and Legal Counsel to find a way to "pause" pending code violation fines that began in 2007 on a 5-acre property in west Eugene. Today, an unfinalized 2001 ag structure permit is all there is to show for the unfinished four-story 8,900-square-foot commercial scale building on the property.

A 2007 notice stated, "In 2001, Lane County Land Management notified you that the two-story structure... had been built with neither land use nor building approvals," and "the permit was not issued and expired-by-limit on April 13, 2005." A May 2022 notice stated, "building permit BP01-00502 for the primary dwelling has expired and... there is no record of a Temporary Certificate of Occupancy."

On August 21, 2023, a notice of financial penalty of $780 per day, reduced from "up to $2,000/day," was issued, following the direction to staff from three commissioners, as noted above. Currently, a local real estate agent is advertising showings of the unpermitted, 8,900-square-foot, four-story building for $1,399,000, ignoring a "no trespassing" sign the county has posted for public safety reasons.

County residents should be concerned about the liability the three conservative commissioners have imposed on us by inexcusably enabling ongoing dismissiveness of county laws by one individual. Those commissioners' actions indicate their own disregard for the interests of the county they were elected to protect.

A NEW STADIUM MAY NOT HELP ECONOMY

I understand the city and county governments are debating whether to finance a stadium facility for the Ems, although I wasn't able to see any documentation about this transaction on the city of Eugene website. Some argue that supporting sports franchises helps the community and are culturally valuable institutions. However, this franchise would siphon local money out of our community into the pockets of the Elmore Sports Group, which has no real stake in our resilience and sustainability.

Academic research shows that no benefit comes to city economic development. A 2008 article in Policy Perspectives says, "Across the nation, franchises have argued that building a new stadium will lead to economic development in the form of increased incomes, jobs and tax revenues. However, the preponderance of academic research has disputed these claims... Stadiums seeking franchises are now shying away from making economic development claims in light of the strong research findings."

BUILD THE NEW STADIUM

Grass roots Civic Stadium supporters battled for years to save the stadium. Eventually, they convinced 4J School Board to sell the stadium to the city, who sold it to Eugene Civic Alliance. Then, on a sorry day in July 2015, our precious stadium burned to the ground. We lost our stadium!

One of the concerns about a new stadium is that MiLB will drop the Emeralds and move to another town. So what! Guess what? It happened in 1974, and thanks to Hugh Luby and others we fielded an independent team that won the 1974 Northwest League baseball pennant.

Another concern is that the new stadium might not be utilized year round. At Civic Stadium a huge funeral was attended by hundreds, Eugene high school held graduation ceremonies there, the Eugene Bombers played football there, and the Eugene Rodeo was held there. The possibilities are endless for interesting events that could be held at a new stadium.

Another concern: It will lower real estate prices for nearby homes. College Hill overlooking the old stadium didn't lose house values; in fact, it has always been a popular place to live.

Once built, the new Civic Stadium would serve thousands of hard working Eugene tax-paying citizens who love baseball, who love safe reasonably priced family entertainment, who love a beer, who love a hot dog smothered in ketchup and mustard and who love to have fun.

Build it.

The Insurrection Election

DECIDING IF TRUMP QUALIFIES FOR THE OREGON BALLOT IN 2024 FALLS SQUARELY ON OUR NEW SECRETARY OF STATE

Former Oregon Secretary of State Shemia Fagan left office in disrepute, but on one important occasion she did her job well. Her successor, LaVonne Griffin-Valade, will need to do the same — under conditions far more stressful than those Fagan faced.

In the fall of 2022, New York Times columnist Nicholas Kristof was generating buzz as an outsider candidate for governor. A Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist, Kristof looked like an exciting new force on the political scene.

But officials in the Elections Division concluded that he did not meet the Oregon Constitution's requirement of three years' residency before a gubernatorial election.

Kristof was outraged, telling Twitter followers that "A failing political establishment in Oregon has chosen to protect itself, rather than give voters a choice." The Oregon Supreme Court, however, ruled unanimously that Fagan had acted correctly. She emerged from the conflict looking better than her detractors.

Now Griffin-Valade must decide whether Donald Trump is "qualified" for Oregon's Republican presidential primary ballot. Compared to this choice, Kristof's case was a walk in the park. Is Trump disqualified from federal office because he has "engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the [United States], or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof" by his role in the Jan. 6 attack on the U.S. Capitol?

The "insurrection" test is enshrined in Section Three of the Fourteenth Amendment. Did Trump cross the line? Surely, he walked right up to it: While a violent mob was assaulting law enforcement and chanting "Hang Mike Pence," Trump encouraged them, tweeting that "Mike Pence didn't have the courage to do what should have been done." Pence escaped the assault by a stroke of luck; by another, the U.S. government was not overthrown by mob action and official connivance.

I have taught constitutional law for 30 years. If I were secretary of state, I would still have to think hard about two questions: First, is Trump disqualified by Section Three? And, second, who has the authority to decide that?

Last month, two outstanding scholars concluded that Trump is disqualified, and that the duty of barring him from office falls to, among others, America's 51 secretaries of state. William Baude of the University of Chicago and Michael Stokes Paulsen of the University of St. Thomas, staunch conservatives and adherents of the Federalist Society, published a paper, "The Scope and Force of Section Three," laying out the history behind that conclusion. They contend that Section Three applies to Trump's actions on Jan. 6, and that his disqualification is "self-executing"—it doesn't require a conviction, court action or legislative vote. As of Jan. 7, 2021, they argue, Trump simply has been ineligible to serve as president. Any official who has sworn to support the Constitution, they suggest, must treat his candidacy as void.

Trump has made little secret of his plan to return to the White House and engineer what he called "the termination of all rules, regulations and articles, even those found in the Constitution." If Baude and Paulsen are right, then Griffin-Valade is one of the republic's lines of defense. It would be not her choice but her duty to bar Trump from the Republican primary ballot.

Other constitutional scholars have joined the chorus in recent weeks — the most prominent being Harvard professor Laurence Tribe and former Federal Judge J. Michael Luttig. Two out-of-state advocacy groups have already written to Griffin-Valade urging her to take similar action.

Is Trump disqualified from federal office because he has 'engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the [United States], or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof' by his role in the Jan. 6 attack on the U.S. Capitol?

Under Oregon law, presidential primary candidates reach the ballot in one of two ways. First, the secretary may list any candidate "generally advocated or ... recognized in national news media"; second, a candidate may submit the signatures of at least 6,000 voters. The announcement of "generally advocated" candidates comes at the end of January; the decision about candidates by petition takes place in March. Whatever Griffin-Valade decides, the question is all but certain to end up in court.

She will face partisan blowback and even potential danger either way. We as citizens are entitled to send her our views, but we are not entitled to demand that she decide the issue one way or the other; fulfilling an oath is a matter for a detailed legal opinion in the first instance and, in the second, the individual conscience of the official. But what we should expect is that her office will make the decision with the same dispassion, care and scorn for partisanship that Fagan showed when she blocked the popular Kristof in 2022. ■

James Manning is in the Running

STATE SEN. JAMES MANNING ANNOUNCES RUN FOR OREGON SECRETARY OF STATE

By Emerson Brady

When James Manning was sworn into office as an Oregon state senator in 2016, he says he had a few goals in mind: to “improve the quality of life in the present and lay out a pathway forward for our future generations where they don’t have to go through some of the missteps and inequities that have already existed.”

Manning is taking those goals with him as he announced his run for Oregon secretary of state in the 2024 election Wednesday, Sept. 13 at the Historic Mims House in Eugene. If Manning wins election, he would be the first person of color to be elected Oregon secretary of state.

As secretary of state, Manning would be the chief elections officer as well as be in charge of administering public records and auditing public accounts. Oregon doesn’t have a lieutenant governor, making the secretary of state next in line to succeed the governor.

Manning has been a public servant most of his life.

He served in the U.S. Army for 24 years and worked on a variety of nonprofit and education boards such as the Pearl Buck Center and the Bethel School District Budget Committee. He later became a state senator, representing District 7 for the past seven years. For Manning, running for secretary of state seemed like the next step in helping establish more stable leadership in Oregon’s government that would support his overall goals as a public servant.

“I think with a stable leadership, with family values and a strong moral background, I am the best candidate for that,” Manning tells Eugene Weekly.

The secretary of state position has seen turnover since Jeanne Atkins retired in 2017. Most notably, with former Secretary of State Shemia Fagan’s decision to take on consulting work for one of the state’s largest cannabis companies and Democratic donors. Fagan’s audits show her suggesting that Oregon needs to loosen cannabis regulations, causing speculation as to whether those audits were influenced by her consulting job. Fagan resigned last May 2023. LaVonne

Griffin-Valade, who was appointed to fill the vacancy, has said she is not running in the 2024 election. Early Wednesday morning, Sept. 13, Oregon Treasurer Tobias Read of Beaverton also announced his run for secretary of state.

The high turnover in the position over the past few years, along with what Manning calls a “distrust in public officials,” has inspired him to build his campaign on stable and strong leadership that will last. “What’s most important is to restore the trust and integrity in that office,” he says.

Manning also wants to put expanding election opportunities at the forefront of his campaign. He is very vocal about protecting election workers in every county in Oregon as well as supporting mail-in ballots so those in rural areas can vote without having to take a day off of work to do so.

“I will be working across the state to come up with more ideas for how we can give everyone access to the ballot,” he says.

One decision relating to the ballot that states across the country may be handling is whether former Presi-

With its 20-year Integrated Resource Plan (IRP), Eugene Water and Electric Board (EWEB), has jumped on the Small Modular Nuclear Reactor (SMR) bandwagon. The purported advantages of SMRs? According to EWEB, their output can be dispatched as needed; their fuel is reliable; and nuclear power “has one of the lowest lifetime carbon emission rates of any energy resource.” None of these holds up to close scrutiny.

Most SMRs require lots of water for cooling, which makes them vulnerable to shut down during times of excessive heat and drought — right when energy demands are peaking. Forced shutdowns of nuclear plants due to heat waves have already occurred in France. Additionally, the global supply of uranium is likely to run out before SMRs reach the end of their lifespan, and more than a third of known global deposits of uranium are low-grade. Carbon emissions from SMRs fueled with low-grade uranium could exceed those of methane-generated electricity, far outstripping the carbon footprint of other renewables.¹

So much for the advantages. The disadvantages of SMRs are legion. They depend on one of the most toxic neocolonial extractive processes on the planet. They are costly and risky. SMRs generate radioactive waste for which we have no solution. Plus they are intimately tied to the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Risks to human and environmental health begin with uranium mining, which leaves in its wake radiation-contaminated soil and water and untold numbers of deaths from radiation poisoning, largely among people of color. Most deposits are located on Indigenous lands or in countries with poor environmental protections, a gross environmental injustice.

NUCLEAR POWER WILL NOT SAVE US

If that’s not appalling enough, cost alone should deter us. According to one Wall Street firm SMR cost estimates per megawatt hour will be 2.5 - 8 times higher than for wind and solar.²

SMR promoters point to the safety records of reactors: only three “significant” accidents in 60 years (Chernobyl, Three Mile Island, Fukushima). Ignoring at least four other accidents involving radiation releases, many that resulted in worker deaths, and near misses. Even more sobering are a series of papers published by the New York Academy of Scientists that peg human deaths from Chernobyl alone at more than one million.

SMRs propose to have fail-safe mechanisms that prevent meltdown and, in the event of meltdown, would not produce the volume of radioactive contamination as a conventional reactor. But how do those safeguards perform against sabotage or in theaters of war? In an increasingly militarized, belligerent world, do we really want thousands of small reactors located in communities with no security forces? Perhaps the thorniest issue is radioactive waste. EWEB, like other SMR supporters, is whistling in the dark stating in its IRP: “It is anticipated that managing or recycling radioactive waste will evolve as SMRs become commissioned.” In the US we are no closer to establishing a national depository for radiation waste than we were in the 1950s.

Author Patricia Kullberg, MD MPH, is a retired public health official and primary care physician. She is active with Oregon Physicians for Social Responsibility.

In addition, a 2022 paper from the National Academy of Sciences found that SMRs will produce greater volumes of radioactive waste than conventional reactors.³ High-level radioactive waste, which includes uranium and plutonium, remains in the environment for hundreds of thousands of years, a toxic legacy that we should not wish on our descendants.

This brings us to the problem of plutonium which, along with uranium, is an isotope used in atomic weapons. Because only tiny amounts of plutonium exist in the natural world, plutonium for nuclear weapons is exclusively obtained as a by-product of nuclear power generation. Ditto for the particular isotope of uranium used in nuclear weapons. Without nuclear reactors, you can’t make nuclear bombs.⁴ This may explain why the US remains keen on nuclear energy.

Fortunately, safer, cleaner, and less fraught solutions — including wind, solar, and high-efficiency, electric appliances such as heat pumps — are now more affordable thanks to the Inflation Reduction Act. A number of recommendations were outlined in a recent letter sent to EWEB endorsed by 40 organizations. Student advocates will hold a climate strike in Eugene on Sept. 15 calling on EWEB to lead in a clean and just transition to renewable energy plus other important calls to action.

Atomic Bamboozle: The False Promise of a Nuclear Renaissance, a new documentary by Portland filmmaker Jan Haaken, explores these issues in depth. For virtual and live screenings of the film contact Haaken at Outreach@jhaaken.com dent Donald Trump will be allowed on the ballot for the 2024 election. Manning says that he is aware the 14th Amendment might bar Trump from being on the ballot, but he is waiting for judicial clarification before commenting any further.

One of Manning's primary goals while working in the Senate was to create a statewide, comprehensive health care board for all that is appointed by the governor and housed under the Department of Consumer and Business Services. Manning has been leading the charge with Senate Bill 1089, which would establish a board that would be in charge of designing an administrative structure for a universal health care plan. Manning says that this plan is in its final stages in the Senate.

"I have been working on this bill for seven years and I am very pleased with the direction that it continues to move forward in," he says.

In addition to working on health care, Manning has a track record of working on homelessness task forces in Eugene, and he has enacted and signed a number of bills relating to gun control, including HB 2005, which defines "undetectable firearms" and punishes manufacturing and selling them.

"I feel as now the next step for conserving the people of Oregon is the secretary of state," Manning says. "I have a proven record of caring and sharing and bipartisanship. It's time to restore the confidence and trust." ■

MISSING IN

OUT OF THE VOID: The Many Ghosts

The McKenzie River Valley — the collective name given to Lane County’s nine unincorporated communities known as Cedar Flat, Camp Creek, Walterville, Leaburg, Vida, Nimrod, Finn Rock, Blue River and McKenzie Bridge — is known for its small town charm, beautiful outdoors and, currently, scorching wildfires.

But the area also has a dark underbelly. Numerous people have gone missing in the area recently, and the bodies of two of those people have been recovered in just the past few months, leading some to speculate that something sinister may be going on.

However, according to the Lane County Sheriff’s Office (LCSO), none of these cases appear to be connected.

In a July 18, KMTR News story on four people missing in the Blue River/Vida area, LCSO Public Information Officer Sgt. Tom Speldrich says, “The best I could do to put any minds at ease on that is to say we have not discovered any evidence that leads us to believe that they are linked or related or that there is a serial killer.”

He adds, “Certainly if we’re able to uncover any information that would lead us to believe that, we would be letting the public know for safety reasons, but we have nothing that tells us that that’s the case right here. It’s a wooded, wilderness, rural area. It’s tough terrain. It can be hard to find people if they go missing in those areas, so while I can’t say definitively that there’s not a link, we have nothing that makes us think that there is at this point.”

Even if the cases are not connected — and even if it turns out there is no foul play involved in them — it seems clear that there are many hidden skeletons in the vast wilderness of the McKenzie River Valley that are waiting to be found.

Some of these skeletons undoubtedly belong to people who got lost and disappeared; others seem to belong to people who chose to disappear; in other cases — such as the case of Shane Sprenger — it seems possible something more nefarious happened. I do not personally believe any of these cases are linked and, in my opinion, only Sprenger’s case has hints that foul play was involved.

The following is an overview of some of McKenzie River Valley’s missing persons and mysteries.

MEKENNA CHRISTINE REILEY

Mekenna Christine Reiley, 40, was reported missing by loved ones on April 5, 2023, after a bizarre encounter with construction workers and LCSO deputies at a construction site in Blue River.

Reiley drove herself there for no apparent reason, and workers found her naked and called police. She told officers she was scared and “had nowhere safe to go,” according to her sister, Bevin Stepp, in an August 14 Fox News story.

Stepp says investigators told the family that Reiley appeared to have either been “roofied” or on “a lot of acid” when law enforcement arrived at the construction site, but LCSO has denied making those remarks.

Officially, LCSO has said that Reiley “was possibly suffering from a mental health crisis” when she vanished.

At the time of her disappearance, Reiley had an Arkansas-bound plane ticket and plans to visit a friend there, according to her sister.

Reiley, originally from Pennsylvania and the granddaughter of longtime former GOP state Rep. Merle Phillips, told relatives she wanted to move back because she did not feel safe in Lane County.

Media reports indicate Reiley’s ex-boyfriend has been ruled out as a suspect in her case despite a history of domestic violence between them and an active no-contact order at the time of her disappearance.

Police found Reiley’s phone, car, fresh groceries and dog at her home. Searchers later found a bag of her clothes in the woods but no other signs of her.

On Saturday, August 12, Reiley’s body was found in the Blue River Reservoir. According to an August 17 story in McKenzie River Reflections, “The State Medical Examiner’s office has ruled the cause of death as drowning. Officials say there are no signs of foul play.”

It is assumed that, due to psychosis or delirium, Reiley got in the water and drowned.

While it may be that no foul play was involved, it seems regrettable that Reiley — who was naked and fearful and apparently disoriented from drugs or mental illness — was allowed to return home instead of being sent to the hospital by the LCSO officers who contacted her just prior to her disappearance, which might have prevented her terrible fate.

SHANE ELDOR SPRENGER

Shane Eldor Sprenger, 47, of Blue River went missing in November 2021.

According to a March 31, 2022, episode of The Vanished podcast, “Shane Sprenger disappeared from Vida, Oregon, on Nov. 2, 2021.” Sprenger was a contractor who was working at a job site near McKenzie Bridge. The podcast says that around 9:30 am, Sprenger left the job and returned to his home in Vida. He was never seen again.

Sprenger’s truck was found abandoned on a logging road near Blue River Reservoir, about 16 miles away from his home near one of Sprenger’s favorite mushroom picking spots. Some people close to him suggested that maybe he had gone mushroom picking and got lost, but it was later discovered that Sprenger had planned to return to the job site to meet with a subcontractor.

Sprenger’s family in Minnesota had no idea that anything was wrong until they got a phone call several days after he vanished. “They made the trip to Oregon to search for him. They began to hear strange stories about the day Shane disappeared, tales that simply weren’t adding up.”

Sprenger, who had a reputation as a hard worker and seems to have been a well-liked member of the Blue River community, previously lost his home in the Holiday Farm Fire in 2020 and was in the process of rebuilding his life.

In June 2023, LCSO announced they had discovered the partial remains of Sprenger’s body off Quartz Creek Road, about five miles southwest of the Blue River Reservoir, where his truck had been found in 2021.

In a July 7, KMTR News story, LCSO’s Sgt. Tom Speldrich says, “We did not locate his entire body, we are still looking for that.”

In the same story, Speldrich is quoted saying, “We don’t have any reason to believe that there is foul play involved, but we also don’t have reason to rule it out at this point.”

Without pointing fingers at anyone, Sprenger’s family has made it clear they believe foul play — possibly stemming from his failing marriage or conflict with local drug users — may be involved in his case.

Sprenger’s family released the following statement on social media following the announcement that his partial remains had been discovered:

“It’s been an excruciating year and a half for our family since Shane went missing on Nov. 2, 2021. He was 47 at the time of his disappearance. We are devastated and our hearts shattered to receive confirmation of his passing. Shane was a gentle soul, a selfless provider, a skilled and trusted carpenter, and the hardest worker we know. He was accepting of everyone and loyal to all that loved him. His was a senseless death, and there is more to uncover on what transpired the day he went missing.”

The family asks people to contact LCSO with tips and and reference case #21-6268 if you have information, or to submit an anonymous tip on CrimeStopper-sofOregon.com.

ERIC RAY BRAZIL

Eric Ray Brazil, 34, of Springfield has been missing since March 14, 2022. He disappeared after “he drove away from his home in a paranoid state” and may have been experiencing a mental health crisis, according to a March 30 KVAL News story.

Brazil was working as an assistant apartment manager at the time of his disappearance.

Brazil’s friends report he became obsessed with Russia’s invasion of Ukraine prior to his disappearance, and seemed to believe it was necessary to flee the area for his safety.

PARADISE

of the McKenzie River Valley BY BRENTON GICKER

Despite attempts by friends to calm him down, he frantically drove away in his vehicle, which was located days later in a treacherous, remote area near Vida. His phone was located near his vehicle and nobody has heard from him since his disappearance.

CHAYSTON EUGENE ROBERTSON

Chayston (“Chase”) Eugene Robertson, 25, has not been seen since April 29, 2020. He was reported missing by family on May 2, 2020. His car was found two days later up Quartz Creek Road near Vida along with his cellphone and other belongings.

Few details about his disappearance are available, but public records indicate he has a history of substance abuse and associated legal problems.

DAMING XU

Daming Xu, 63, has been missing since Nov. 4, 2007. He is the only person discussed in this article who did not disappear under suspicious circumstances or come from a troubled background.

All accounts indicate Xu was a beloved husband and father of two children and a well-liked University of Oregon professor.

According to a Nov. 3, 2017, article from StrangeOutdoors.com, Xu came to the U.S. from China in the late 1980s and he became a professor of mathematics at the UO. “He and his wife, Shixiu, loved traveling to Oregon’s wilderness areas for day hikes and both were very fit for their age.”

Xu headed to the Three Sisters Wilderness area to climb the Olallie Mountain in what was intended to be a day trip. His wife reported him missing the next day after he failed to return home.

His 2003 White Chevy Impala was found on Bear Flats near Terwilliger Hot Springs on Nov. 6.

Xu took a hiking book with him titled 100 Hikes in the Central Oregon Cascades by William L Sullivan. Tattered remnants of the book were found in the woods a couple weeks after his disappearance, according to a Register-Guard article at the time. The other half of the book was in his Impala.

Extensive search efforts by the Army National Guard, LCSO, University of Oregon faculty members and search and rescue teams and others failed to find Xu.

Strangeoutdoors.com reports that “Despite a beautiful sunny day and a good map, he appears to have got disorientated and wandered off in the wrong direction to an unknown fate, for some reason. It was unfortunate that the weather turned bad soon after he was reported missing. Given the thick, inaccessible forest around the French Pete Creek drainage where his guidebook was found, it is likely his remains will never be discovered.”

REBEKAH NOEL BRAMEL

Rebekah Noel Bramel, 26, of Portland, has been missing since April 30, 2007. Family and friends report she was having a mental health crisis at the time she disappeared and may have been suicidal.

According to The Charley Project, in early May 2007, “the vehicle she’d borrowed from a friend was found five miles up an isolated logging road road between Deerhorn and Goodpasture Roads, in a rural area east of Springfield. The vehicle had a flat tire and the gas tank was empty.”

The contents of Bramel’s wallet were laid out on the dashboard, The Charley Project says, including the cigarette case she cherished. “There was no sign of Bramel at the scene. She had previously visited the area with her boyfriend, but she has no relatives living there and authorities don’t know why she would go there again.”

As I wrote previously in an April 29, 2021, article “The Disappearance” for Eugene Weekly, “A major setback in figuring out what happened to Rebekah was the gap between when her vehicle turned up and when the tow company notified the owner that it had been recovered.”

Her vehicle sat on the tow lot for about a month before the friend who owned the car was notified. “The tow company should have notified the police about the vehicle immediately, which would have triggered a search effort,” I wrote. “The tow company’s negligence resulted in a major delay in search efforts that might have been successful had they been conducted sooner.”

My personal opinion is that every case mentioned above, other than Xu’s, involves mental illness and/or substance abuse. Lack of treatment for mental illness and addiction, along with homelessness, are the biggest issues facing Oregonians. According to an April 17, 2020, article by Molly Harbarger in The Oregonian, “Oregon’s chronically underfunded mental health system is nearly universally accepted as being broken. It ranks at or near the bottom on many national metrics.” Until that changes, Oregonians can only expect more tragedies involving those suffering from mental illness and substance dependency.

Brenton Gicker is a registered nurse in Eugene who has worked for local mental health services for most of his adult life. He began writing stories about missing people in 2018. He can be reached at OutFromTheVoid@yahoo.com. More information on these cases can be found on The Charley Project at CharleyProject.org and from the National Missing and Unidentified Persons System at NamUs.nij.ojp.gov.

The Cuthbert Amphitheater hosts Leihoku Fest Eugene Sept. 15. A night full of rock, reggae, island influences and more will fill the amphitheater as performers take the stage. Up from Orange County, Common Kings (pictured) headlines with their Polynesian reggae pop music. Iam Tongi, the 2023 American Idol winner from Kahuku, Hawaii, will perform as a special guest. Jakob Nowell, also known as Jakobs Castle and son of late Sublime singer, Bradley Nowell, will also make an appearance. Australian native and Polynesian artist, Sammy Johnson blends island reggae, soul and jazz and was recently added to the lineup. “We’re doing the show to highlight the Polynesian community and their voyaging spirit,” says Brenden Clement, managing member for Concert Kings Events. “Leihoku” is a Hawaiian word meaning “a lei (or wreath) of stars.” In early August, a series of wildfires burned on Maui. Homes were destroyed. Scores of lives were taken and forever changed. The island will never be the same. Hawaiian native and former Oregon football player Marcus Mariota created the Motiv8 Foundation to motivate youth through education and recreation. The foundation is collaborating with the concert to encourage donations to the Maui Strong Fund, which provides resources for the community’s needs. For every dollar donated through the Motiv8 Foundation, Leihoku Fest will match up to $25,000 through Sept. 30. The Leihoku Fest Eugene will not only fuel an entertaining night, but will also contribute to an ongoing worldwide issue. “It will be welcoming to all in a celebration of Hawaiian and Polynesian culture,” Clement says. “I really hope that they come away with a sense of ohana, and ‘ohana’ in Hawaiian means ‘family.’”

Cuthbert Amphitheater hosts Leihoku Fest Eugene Sept. 15 at 6 pm located at 2300 Leo Harris Pkwy in Alton Baker Park. Tickets are $50 online at TheCuthbert.com. Unless sold out, tickets day of show are $55 at The Cuthbert Amphitheater Box Office. Donations can be made at Motiv8Foundation.com or at the event. — Brianna Murschel

For the first time ever, this moving and hilarious show takes the stage at a local theater. Terry Ray directs the musical comedy Sweet Charity at The Shedd Institute Sept. 15 through 24. In January 1966, the hit musical made its debut at Broadway's Palace Theatre and was nominated for nine Tony Awards. Neil Simon wrote Sweet Charity, while the music and lyrics are by Cy Coleman and Dorothy Fields. Lynnea Barry, an actress who also works in corporate relations at The Shedd, plays Charity Hope Valentine in the show. Charity, a dance hostess, lives a gullible yet hopeful life and seems to always give her heart out to the wrong man, though she does share a sweet relationship with Oscar Lindquist (Cloud Pemble). Barry says her character makes some poor choices, but always stays upbeat, and "That's the charm of Charity." Numerous songs will fill the show, including "Big Spender," "If My Friends Could See Me Now," "Sweet Charity" and more. "This is definitely the hardest role I've ever played," Barry says. "I am singing and dancing and talking for two and a half hours straight. But it's been a good challenge." A tale of a young woman's journey through hardships in life and love will fill the theater with lots of laughter and leave the audience with warm hearts.

Sweet Charity takes the stage Sept. 15 to 17 and Sept. 22 to 24 at The Shedd Institute, 868 High Street. Friday and Saturday shows are from 7:30 pm to 10:15 pm, and Sunday shows are from 3 pm to 5:45 pm. Tickets range from $21.75 to $39 with various discounted options online at TheShedd.org. — Brianna Murschel

GODFATHER OF EUGENE COMEDY SETH MILSTEIN TAPES AN HOUR-LONG COMEDY SPECIAL AT THE BIG DIRTY

By Will Kennedy

Veteran Eugene comedian Seth Milstein will tape his first comedy special on Sept. 15 at The Big Dirty in Eugene. Behind the camera will be Brent James Driscoll, Seattle-based musician, comedian and videographer formerly of Eugene, whose team won the 2021 regional Emmy in entertainment for their Seattle-based livestream concert series, Sessions in Place.

Milstein has attempted to self-produce an hour-long comedy special before, but a series of technical mishaps turned those projects into dress rehearsals, he tells Eugene Weekly while sitting at The Big Dirty bar.

“I didn’t really have time to focus on my stuff,” Milstein says. “I just want to hire someone to do the job so I can show up.”

When Milstein started standup comedy 14 years ago, Eugene had no comedy open mics to speak of. Since then, he’s been instrumental in building a scene with almost nightly opportunities for experienced comedians to practice new material or those curious about standup comedy to try it for themselves.

Milstein, who won EW’s 2020 Best of Eugene: Best Comedian category, hosts an open mic at Slice Pizzeria & Bar’s Whiteaker neighborhood location on Monday nights and helps bring regional and national touring comedians to town as he did with Just Comedy, a standup comedy promotion company.

For reasons mentioned, Milstein is often referred to by many as the “godfather” of the Eugene scene, and he’s performed as far away as New York and California.

An experienced comedy videographer, Driscoll plans a five-camera shoot at The Big Dirty, he tells EW in a later phone call. The finished product will likely end up on platforms like YouTube and TikTok.

At live tapings, comedy audiences need to be mindful that a production’s in progress with no heckling or little extra noise — beyond, of course, laughing. The show may also stop and start, he says.

Typically, Driscoll says, when he explains the ground rules, audiences listen. “They love just being a part of it,” Driscoll says, and his own experience in comedy also helps him shoot other comedians. “I know what comedians want,” Driscoll says.

Milstein’s Big Dirty set, which he’s written out for the first time to build a narrative arc, will feature go-to closers but also “newer stuff I’ve been working on lately that’s been working really well,” Milstein says.

“When I write something new,” he adds, “I have these themes: This is about drug use, this is about my issues with depression. Fatherhood has always been a big theme — relationships, mental health, a lot of food stuff, food and sexuality.”

Often conversational on stage, Milstein could be responsible for one of the best written one-liners to emerge from Eugene. Affectionately referring to his late mother, Milstein quips: “I loved her to death — and it worked!” ■

Supported by Eugene comedians Luke Miller, Angie Bloomfield, Devin Jones and Rudy Tyburczy, “Sethington: a Live Comedy Recording” is 9 pm Friday, Sept. 15, at The Big Dirty, 844 Olive Street. $10, 21-plus.

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): Aries photographer Wynn Bullock had a simple, effective way of dealing with his problems and suffering. He said, “Whenever I have found myself stuck in the ways I relate to things, I return to nature. It is my principal teacher, and I try to open my whole being to what it has to say.” I highly recommend you experiment with his approach in the coming weeks. You are primed to develop a more intimate bond with the flora and fauna in your locale. Mysterious shifts now unfolding in your deep psyche are making it likely you can discover new sources of soulful nourishment in natural places — even those you’re familiar with. Now is the best time ever to hug trees, spy omens in the clouds, converse with ravens, dance in the mud and make love in the grass.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): Creativity expert Roger von Oech says businesspeople tend to be less successful as they mature because they become fixated on solving problems rather than recognizing opportunities. Of course, it’s possible to do both—untangle problems and be alert for opportunities—and I’d love you to do that in the coming weeks. Whether or not you’re a businessperson, don’t let your skill at decoding riddles distract you from tuning into the new possibilities that will come floating into view.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): Gemini author Fernando Pessoa wrote books and articles under 75 aliases. He was an essayist, literary critic, translator, publisher, philosopher and one of the great poets of the Portuguese language. A consummate chameleon, he constantly contradicted himself and changed his mind. Whenever I read him, I’m highly entertained but sometimes unsure of what the hell he means. He once wrote, “I am no one. I don’t know how to feel, how to think, how to love. I am a character in an unwritten novel.” And yet Pessoa expressed himself with great verve and had a wide array of interests. I propose you look to him as an inspirational role model in the coming weeks, Gemini. Be as intriguingly paradoxical as you dare. Have fun being unfathomable. Celebrate your kaleidoscopic nature.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): “Rather than love, than money, than fame, give me truth.” Cancerian author Henry David Thoreau said that. I don’t necessarily agree. Many of us might prefer love to truth. Plus, there’s the inconvenient fact that if we don’t have enough money to meet our basic needs, it’s hard to make truth a priority. The good news is that I don’t believe you will have to make a tough choice between love and truth anytime soon. You can have them both! There may also be more money available than usual. And if so, you won’t have to forgo love and truth to get it.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): Before she got married, Leo musician Tori Amos told the men she dated, “You have to accept that I like ice cream. I know it shows up on my hips, but if you can’t accept that, then leave. Go away. It is non-negotiable.” I endorse her approach for your use in the coming weeks. It’s always crucial to avoid apologizing for who you really are, but it’s especially critical in the coming weeks. And the good news is that you now have the power to become even more resolute in this commitment. You can dramatically bolster your capacity to love and celebrate your authentic self exactly as you are.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): The Virgo writer Caskie Stinnett lived on Hamloaf, a small island off the coast of Maine. He exulted in the fact that it looked “the same as it did a thousand years ago.” Many of the stories he published in newspapers featured this cherished home ground. But he also wandered all over the world and wrote about those experiences. “I travel a lot,” he said. “I hate having my life disrupted by routine.” You Virgos will make me happy in the coming weeks if you cultivate a similar duality: deepening and refining your love for your home and locale, even as you refuse to let your life be disrupted by routine.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): My hitchhiking adventures are finished. They were fun while I was young, but I don’t foresee myself ever again trying to snag a free ride from a stranger in a passing car. Here’s a key lesson I learned from hitchhiking: Position myself in a place that’s near a good spot for a car to stop. Make it easy for a potential benefactor to offer me a ride. Let’s apply this principle to your life, Libra. I advise you to eliminate any obstacles that could interfere with you getting what you want. Make it easy for potential benefactors to be generous and kind. Help them see precisely what it is you need.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): In your history of togetherness, how lucky and skillful have you been in synergizing love and friendship? Have the people you adored also been good buddies? Have you enjoyed excellent sex with people you like and respect? According to my analysis of the astrological omens, these will be crucial themes in the coming months. I hope you will rise to new heights and penetrate to new depths of affectionate lust, spicy companionship, and playful sensuality. The coming weeks will be a good time to get this extravaganza underway.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): Is it ever morally permissible to be greedily needy? Are there ever times when we deserve total freedom to feel and express our voracious longings? I say yes. I believe we should all enjoy periodic phases of indulgence — chapters of our lives when we have the right, even the sacred duty, to tune into the full range of our quest for fulfillment. In my astrological estimation, Sagittarius, you are beginning such a time now. Please enjoy it to the max! Here’s a tip: For best results, never impose your primal urges on anyone; never manipulate allies into giving you what you yearn for. Instead, let your longings be beautiful, radiant, magnetic beacons that attract potential collaborators.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): Here’s a Malagasy proverb: “Our love is like the misty rain that falls softly but floods the river.” Do you want that kind of love, Capricorn? Or do you imagine that a more boisterous version would be more interesting — like a tempestuous downpour that turns the river into a torrential surge? Personally, I encourage you to opt for the misty rain model. In the long run, you will be glad for its gentle, manageable overflow.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): According to the Bible’s book of Matthew, Jesus thought it was difficult for wealthy people to get into heaven. If they wanted to improve their chances, he said they should sell their possessions and give to the poor. So Jesus might not agree with my current oracle for you. I’m here to tell you that every now and then, cultivating spiritual riches dovetails well with pursuing material riches. And now is such a time for you, Aquarius. Can you generate money by seeking enlightenment or doing God’s work? Might your increased wealth enable you to better serve people in need? Should you plan a pilgrimage to a sacred sanctuary that will inspire you to raise your income? Consider all the above, and dream up other possibilities, too.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): Piscean author Art Kleiner teaches the art of writing to non-writers. He says this: 1. Tell your listeners the image you want them to see first. 2. Give them one paragraph that encapsulates your most important points. 3. Ask yourself, “What tune do you want your audience to be humming when they leave?” 4. Provide a paragraph that sums up all the audience needs to know but is not interesting enough to put at the beginning. I am offering you Kleiner’s ideas, Pisces, to feed your power to tell interesting stories. Now is an excellent time to take inventory of how you communicate and make any enhancements that will boost your impact and influence. Why not aspire to be as entertaining as possible?

Homework: For three days, love yourself exactly as you are. Don’t wish you could change yourself. Newsletter:FreeWillAstrology.com.

SAVAGE LOVE

BY DAN SAVAGE

I'm reading you from Italy, and I could really use your advice. About four years ago, I started dating a girl who I've been living with for the past two months. Since I've known her, she has been suffering from periods of depression and anxiety, although I didn't know it when we first started to date. She used to spend a lot of time in therapy and continues to take medication. It has been very tough for both of us, and I even ended up talking to a psychologist for a while.

I was immediately captivated by her sensitivity, her sweetness and the way she sees things. In many ways, she completes me. But soon after the beginning stages of our relationship, our connection lost its passionate side almost entirely, mainly due to the medication she's taking, but also because of her anxieties related to the fear of pain in her intimate areas. I've tried to accept this while encouraging her to see specialists who could alleviate her fears. I've also been encouraging her to resume her conversations with her psychologist, which she stopped about three months ago.

What should I do? I don't want to break up with her. I care about her and believe that with time, things will get better, but right now there is a significant void in our relationship.

— Vexed Over Intimate Decline

You're not fucking, right?

I don't know what else, "our connection lost its passionate side," could possibly mean, so I'm gonna go with "not fucking." And it sounds like the fucking stopped — it sounds like the passion was lost — pretty early in the relationship ("soon after the beginning stages"), which means you've been in a sexless relationship for three years and change.

Just in case you need to hear it from someone: There's nothing wrong with wanting to have sex with your romantic partner, VOID, particularly if the relationship was sexual at the start. And while I don't think it's fair to head for the exits at the first sign of a physical or emotional challenge — it's certainly not loving — we aren't obligated to stay in relationships that don't meet our reasonable emotional and physical needs. (There's also a huge difference between abandoning someone after decades together and ending a relationship relatively early in life that isn't meeting your needs.)

You said you don't want to break up, VOID, but at the very least you need to consider breaking up. Because not only are you growing increasingly unhappy in this relationship, VOID, it doesn't sound like your girlfriend is very happy. You've tried to help, and it hasn't worked — but, hey, maybe something will click after another year or two or three and your girlfriend will start seeing her psychologist again and the specialists she needs to see. (I would recommend a pelvic floor specialist.) But what if things don't get better? What if this is it? Are you willing to stay in this relationship, as-is, for the rest of your life?

Having a loving and supportive partner in our corner during a life crisis can make all the difference. But sometimes having a partner who refuses to leave us because we're depressed or unemployed or on fire — sometimes knowing our partner would never abandon us in that condition — can perversely incentivize not seeking treatment or looking for work or stamping out the flames. Which is why a person in your position, VOID, a person with your values, eventually has to ask himself, "Is staying helping my partner or hurting my partner? Am I standing by them or am I enabling them?" Some other questions you need to ask yourself at this point: "Am I happy?" "Am I being cared for?" "If nothing changes, can I live like this — can I live with these unfilled voids — for the rest of my life?"

Once you've answered those questions — and answered them honestly — you'll know what you need to do. Leaving will be extremely hard, if that's what you ultimately decide you need to do, but leaving someone doesn't have to mean abandoning them. You can still be there for this amazing woman — not as a boyfriend, but as a close friend. Still supportive, still encouraging and still amazed.

I'm a 31-year-old Italian girl. I'm in a relationship with a married man who has two children, both around the age of 10. He joined my sports league this winter. We had a long flirtship that became sexual in April, and we fell in love. The first months were awesome, and we had great sex imbued into both romance and roughness. As our relationship went on, he started saying things that seemed to show a desire to separate from his wife. (He says they don't have sex.) He said things like, "I would love just doing laundry with you," and, "I really would love to sleep with you every night." At some point, things with his wife worsened. He shared thoughts about separation and divorce with me and with his parents. (His parents now know of my existence.) At some point, during a conflict with his wife, they finally used the word "separation." He became sad and told me he couldn't do it. He said his kids would suffer too much. From that moment, I could not bear this relationship anymore. I am too deeply in love, and my expectations could not revert to what they once were. I'm trying to break up with him, but it is hard. I talked with him about my feelings, and he feels guilty about telling me things that made me believe in a future with him. So now, even though he says he is in love with me, he has agreed to break up, because he doesn't want me to suffer. But I am sad. I don't know what to do. I know it would be better for me to forget about him, but it is hard. Are there any solutions to overcoming this situation quickly? One of the problems is that we are on the same recreational sports team, which means we see each other twice a week.

— Breakup Attempt Somehow Isn't Catching

So, you wanna break up with him, he's graciously agreed to break up with you, but you're having a hard time sticking the dismount because — like Neil Sadeka discovered back in 1962 —breaking up is hard to do. It's particularly hard to do when the sex is great, the connection is awesome and circumstances keep throwing you together.

But circumstances — at least the ones you mentioned — aren't outside your control. If you can't see him without feeling sad and/or wanting to fuck him and/or feeling sad right after you fuck him, BASIC, then you'll have to stop seeing him. That means asking him to quit the team (you were there first) or, if he refuses, quitting the team yourself. If you're not willing to do that — if you're not willing quit the team — then I can only conclude you don't wanna stop fucking this guy and you aren't going to stop fucking this guy. You have the decency to feel bad about continuing to fuck him, though, which speaks well of your character.

P.S. If your lover is only staying in his marriage because the kids are young and divorce would upend their lives, your lover and his wife are likely to part ways — amicably — once their kids are grown. I realize a decade is a long time to wait, but mistresses who play the long game sometimes win the crown. Just ask Camilla.

Fact-Checking Holvey's Claims

Noted liar¹ Paul Holvey has made a number of claims in his official response to the upcoming Recall election. Some of his claims really stretch the truth!

"standing up for working families"

Holvey's idea of "standing up" for working families includes slashing their pensions twice² (because the first was declared illegal by the Supreme Court!), eliminating hazard pay for front-line COVID workers³, and opposing organizing rights⁴.

"raise the minimum wage"

SB 1532 (2016) began in the Senate Workforce Committee, which had three meetings on the subject and adopted amendments. According to the Legislative Record, Rep. Holvey did not participate in those meetings. Rep. Holvey held a 90-minute hearing, at which no changes were made. The bill passed on a mostly party-line vote.⁸

Un-fun Fact:

Thanks to SB 1532, the minimum wage in Eugene will always be $1.25/hour less than the minimum wage in Portland.¹⁰ (Yes, Democrats had double Legislative majorities at the time.)

"workplace safety laws"

There have been some decent workplace safety laws put in place that have come across Holvey's desk. But even though Holvey is on the budget-writing Ways & Means Committee, he's done nothing to stem the disinvestment of enforcement staff at BOLI (see chart below)¹⁴ and Oregon-OSHA. All the safety regulations in the world aren't going to help workers if we don't have the staff to hold unsafe employers accountable. Holvey hasn't done that hard work.

"the environment"

Just last session, Holvey helped pass HB 3414 out of Committee⁵, which tried to undo much of Oregon's land use system and was labeled by environmental advocates as the "biggest rollback of urban environmental protections that Oregon has ever seen."⁶

"investments in our communities"

OPB recently reported⁷ Holvey's committee "quietly OK'd a $90 million cost overrun" on renovating the State Capitol, without mentioning it to the public or even noting it in documentation. Co-Chair Rep. Holvey didn't respond to OPB's inquiries as to why.

"establish paid sick time"

The bill that established paid sick time, SB 454, lists its Chief Sponsors as Rep. Rosenbaum, Sen. Steiner Hayward, Rep. Hoyle, and Rep. Vega Pederson. Holvey is listed as a minor sponsor along with 23 other lawmakers. It did not go through any committee that Holvey sat on.⁹

"fair pay for farmworkers"

Holvey is listed as a Chief Sponsor on HB 4002,¹¹ which indeed required overtime pay for farmworkers. However, after the bill was amended once, Holvey specifically requested and adopted amendments to the bill¹² (and later requested and passed HB 2058 in 2023) to pay affected employers up to $10 million out of the General Fund¹³ to recoup their costs, essentially shifting costs to taxpayers and public services.

From Paul Holvey's "Statement of Justification" filed with the Secretary of State:

VOTE NO ON THIS RECKLESS RECALL

As your State Representative, I'm proud of my record standing up for working families, the environment, protecting access to reproductive health care, and prioritizing investments in our community. I fought successfully to raise the minimum wage, establish paid sick time, improve workplace safety laws and ensure fair pay for farm workers.

One disgruntled union launched this recall after I asked questions about their proposed legislation. Because our attorneys said it would violate federal law, I decided to not support it. Their retribution is spending a fortune on a smear campaign to place this recall on the ballot. No other union or organization has joined them.

This recall would overturn a fair election result from less than a year ago. Recalls should be used when elected officials commit crimes or major ethical abuse, not when one special interest gets upset because their bill didn't pass.

Please Vote NO.

"I asked questions"

No he didn't. Watch the hearing for yourself:

"attorneys said it would violate federal law"

The legislative attorneys said no such thing, and had to remind Holvey of that fact:¹⁵

"... absent judicial guidance on this issue, we cannot predict with certainty how the NLRB or a court would ultimately decide."

Letter from Legislative Counsel to Rep. Holvey, 5/15/23

"Recalls should be used when..."

As a matter of fact, most recalls in Oregon originate because politicians fell out of step with their constituents' values, not because of a crime or ethics violation.¹⁶

Even so, the curious connection between La Mota's cannabis industry contributions and Holvey's killing of HB 3183 is recall-worthy under this standard! (More info on that at www.RecallPaulHolvey.com)
